

Balancing Individual and Family Interests in Collective Giving 2023 Community Conversations Webinar Resource List

Description

For many, family philanthropy presents an opportunity to create a shared experience, unifying the family by working together toward a lasting legacy of impact. Family philanthropy can also give participants an opportunity to explore and cultivate their personal—and sometimes separate—philanthropic passions. There can be an inherent tension between these two goals, and many families struggle with how to address it—especially as families become larger and more complex over time. In this session, you will hear the preliminary results of a study that is focused on how families have addressed this tension as they enter the 3rd, 4th and 5th generation of family members.
